and books. The Lawyer's Guide to Collaboration Tools and Technologies, by Dennis Kennedy and Tom Mighell, is one of the best. The authors, both lawyers and highly respected legal technologies, put their collaborative efforts together to provide the reader with everything from A to Z about how legal professionals can work together more efficiently and effectively. How do you work with others? Most lawyers use the telephone and email to collaborate, but technology provides much more highly productive tools to make this job easier and more efficient. In this world of Internet applications, Web 2.0 technologies, and the newly minted "Internet golf course," lawyers are striving to find alternative ways to work with clients and counsel. The book not only explains how lawyers currently collaborate, but provides in an easy-to-read format how to get from your current methods to more sophisticated, technology-driven methods, such as document collaboration (including a detailed explanation of meta data), instant messaging, online meetings, and collaboration platforms such as Intranets and Extranets. The best part is the last part - Tips and Techniques that are tried and true. If you work with other professionals, this book is an outstanding resource on how to work better and smarter.

This first-of-its-kind guide for the legal profession shows you how to use standard technology you already have and the latest "Web 2.0" resources and other tech tools, like Google Docs, Microsoft Office and SharePoint, and Adobe Acrobat, to work more effectively on projects with colleagues, clients, co-counsel and even opposing counsel.

About the Author Dennis Kennedy's books include The Spectator and the Spectacle: Audiences in Modernity and Postmodernity, The Oxford Encyclopedia of Theatre and Performance, Looking at Shakespeare: A Visual History of Twentieth-Century Performance, Foreign Shakespeare, and Granville Barker and the Dream of Theatre. He has twice been a fellow of the National Endowment for the Humanities in the USA, twice won the Freedley Award for theatre history, received the Chancellor's Distinguished Research Award at the University of Pittsburgh, the Berkeley Fellowship at Trinity College Dublin, and was elected to the Royal Irish Academy and Academia Europaea. His own plays have been performed in New York, London, and many other places, and he has frequently worked as a dramaturg and director in professional theatres.
